Bolinas lagoon fishing report

Let's go to Bolinas. The big fish are there. TLA: hmm... Okay, what time do you get there? 5:00 a.m TLA hmm... Not at 5 a.m. I'm not a young woman anymore. I need some sleep. 2017 Adventures at Bolinas As Learn to Catch Salmon from a Caiac I Arrived at Bolinas at Day Break and Ran Into A Few NCKA Brothers. It's that time of year when I make my annual pilgrimage to this sacred land of great fish and legendary stories. The shore breaks were small and welcoming, compared to the passing adventures. The dangers of surf launch (Lagoon and Brighton ave) are well documented, so I'll leave it there. The color of brownish-red water, temp 58 degrees and full moon were all bad signs, however, bait stacks throughout the area was a great sign! I loaded the needle and managed to get out. The boats arrived early, as usual, and began the morning feeding frenzy. The birds worked at the massive bait balls, and the morning salmon marauders took their place in the fleet. I took my sabiki and shot some live bait for the size of the tray. (My favorite method of salmon fishing). I sent one live under the bait ball and waited for the action. About 20 minutes in my drift, I see the familiar tap tap tap at the tip of my fishing rod. Oh... something is on. I gently pulled the rod from the rod holder and fed the fish some line... then I fed him more. The tip indicated that the fish was still working on the bait... I've been waiting. Then my rod bends! BENDO, please! FishON! I felt the weight of the fish bend my rod directly into the water because it peels off the 25-40 ft line on my coil. From the back of my kayak I see fish making a jump and thrash the surface of the water before making a b-line towards me. I quickly earn back the line and sell quickly to keep the tension on the hook. She made several circles to tire him out and made several heess runs to get off the hook. The thoughts of the lost multiple fish through the season drifted in and out of my mind. I was wondering if I was self-destructive when it comes to salmon fishing. LOL, but I keep my cool and removed my thoughts. That goes in the boat, or I'll never hear the end from my gesh friends. I take it under the boat and float upside down. It makes one more heart blast then goes straight into the net. Wooh, what's up with you? My first salmon day, and it was great to get the monkey off my back. Bolinas King Salmon I've been a little absent lately due to other important priorities, but promised a friend I would post something.
